Rose and Johnathan met at a medical school costume party welcoming new students to campus. Dressed as Pocahontas and the nerdy character Squints from the movie "The Sandlot," the two characters really hit it off. When they began dating, Rose and John's love for each other grew. One day after returning home from work, Rose found her apartment filled with dozens of small flickering candles forming a pathway to her coffee table. On the coffee table was a questionnaire with clues as to how she could find John. After following the clues, Rose soon found John waiting for her in a nearby park where he sang her a song about finding love before asking Rose to marry him. Rose, of course, said yes and John presented her with her grandmother's ring that he had redesigned into a stunning setting.

Rose and John said, "I do" on May 3, 2014, at the Holy Trinity Catholic Church. Rose looked simply stunning in her princess gown by Vera Wang featuring a structured strapless corset and full skirt of tulle. Following the ceremony, guests enjoyed a gorgeous reception with family and friends at the Dallas Country Club. The reception hall was a stunning sight of purple and fuchsia brought to life by Rachel Burt with As You Wish. As both Rose and John are physicians, guests got a kick out of the "prescription for a happy marriage" box where they could leave the happy couple sweet notes of marriage advice.

After the grand celebration, Rose and John honeymooned in Grenada. The couple currently resides in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where they are completing their residency training.
